Course Description

This course introduces students to the liberal tradition in Western Political Philosophy. We will trace the historical roots of contemporary issues and pay special attention to recent critiques. Some of the questions we will be interested include: What makes a state legitimate? What is justice? What is the role of culture and community in just political arrangements? What is the relation between liberty and equality? And how can we ask these questions in patriarchal and racist social contexts? We will start the course by following the development of key ideas in early modern Europe, through the work of authors such as Hobbes, Rousseau and Mill. We will then focus on 20th century North American liberalism as articulated by John Rawls. We will explore Rawls' influential work and equally influential critiques from libertarian, feminist, and anti-racist perspectives. We will finish by looking at related 20th century debates regarding the relation between liberty, equality and community. We will be paying special attention to conceptual distinctions regarding equality and liberty and we will study multiculturalist and communitarian arguments in the context of those distinctions.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of this course students will be better able to:

- Explain key ideas and debates in Political Philosophy.

- Relate, compare, and contrast the positions of various authors studied in the course.
- Explain the historical development of contemporary Political Philosophy, and its relation to other positions and debates.
- Articulate arguments succinctly and clearly in an essay format.
